

MUSIC
'Brash, sexual, loud'
 by GARRY RAFFAELE

Clash, Cockney Thieves
 THERE is a steady diet of rock music on campus — brash, sexual, loud, unapologetic and incendiary.

There's last night, the music was repetitive, predictable — and the audience of 100 loved it so much that they screamed while they danced and the music, driving and screaming and generally doing the work of thousands of words.

I was not, you understand, against loud music — only against the music that is so repetitive, that it is so predictable, that it is so totally sexual that you feel your head being pounded into the wall and having another headache.

In spite of the audience reaction, the music of the Clash, the Sex Pistols, and the Stray Cats, which stood out from the rest with their three-part vocal harmonies and dance between simplified three and guitar.
