Sex image for Hush

Sex, not dope, is the formula for success of Hush — the most progressive band in the country.

"The sexual image is probably the most important thing we try to put across when we are on stage.

"We always compete against each other to turn on the crowd," said Rick Lum from the band.

Hush admit their music is simple, and they love playing to an uninhibited crowd.

Effect

"We can only enjoy ourselves when the crowd is enjoying it too, and that is why we must discipline ourselves and be fully aware of what people want."

point of telling me drugs were not Hush's scene.

"I am sure this has had a big effect on our success and overall professionalism," he said.

This Sunday, Hush will be playing at the Hordern Pavilion with Jon English and Sebastian Hardie, in what they regard as the most important concert of their career.

The concert is hoped to be a live performance of their latest album, Oct Rocked, which looks like going a long way.

message across in their music, and the emphasis is always on having a good time.

"We play our own special brand of rock'n'roll, and this Sunday we want to prove we are as good as any local or overseas band seen in this country," said Les Gock, the lead guitarist.
